1. Reason for collaborative reading circles
2. What the reading circles are and my adaptations to traditional roles
3. Practical example of each role
4. In-class discussion interactions
5. Hands-on sample
• Need for interactive, intensive reading practice for academic-type sources, not fiction
• Adaption to roles required for context
By focusing on individual reading tasks on a text, when sharing what they’ve discovered, learners gain a deeper, interactive understanding of that text than they could have individually.

Considerations:
- Time to do main reading once over individually
- Time to do main reading intensively using assigned role
- Time to do extra work associated with roles (e.g. research, create handouts, extended readings, etc.)

Context is important.
People, places or events that the author mentions but doesn’t elaborate much for the reader.

1. Identify contextual references
2. Separate useful from irrelevant
3. Learn more info to understand author’s point
Occupy Wall Street: what would Gandhi say?
What two references does Gupta mention that support her point, are not elaborated on and would be useful for students to learn more about?
Here are just two of hundreds of acts that could be opened up as public possibilities. Vets returning from Iraq and Afghanistan often say they just want to be listened to and know their experience is honoured by attention at home. ... Shelters for the homeless are often so dirty and dangerous that the street is preferable. This would be a lot less possible if neighbourhoods or corporations or colleges organized their members to clean and monitor a shelter for a few hours each week. These actions at the bottom may seem small right now. Gandhi’s Salt March to the sea when he defied the English salt-making monopoly by leading thousands to collect and make their own salt must have seemed small then. Rosa Parks refusing to change her seat on a bus must have also seemed small at that time.

A multitude of pathways to youth addiction

• Several reasons for becoming an addict, not just playing
• Personality, physical, psychological
• Characteristics of youth gamblers compared to other youth
• Other problems that exist before gambling

Supporting point

“Young gambling addicts are found to be more impulsive, excitable, extroverted, anxious, self-blaming and emotionally unstable than young non-gamblers.”
Schlesinger refers to a time in Guatemala’s history when 72% of its land was owned by 2% of the population (par. 4). In what way does this ratio look familiar?

Schlesinger discusses connections between Arbenz and communists in terms of a ‘guilty by association’ concept (par. 6), which means that who you know or have some connection to, no matter how minor, influences others’ opinions of you, either positively or more often negatively. Where else do we see this type of false logic when dealing with the opinions of others?
• A series of extended, thematically-related texts for student choice
• Student-sourced extra readings
• A devil’s advocate reading
• Show significance to lecture topics
• Relate it to personal experience

There has been a curious bout of revisionist history in recent weeks criticizing the U.S. decision not to "finish the job" during the 1991 Gulf War and overthrow the Iraqi government of Saddam Hussein. With such a lopsided victory in the six-week military campaign, these right-wing critics argue the U.S. could have easily marched into the capital of Baghdad and ousted the dictator.
